Women workers are over-represented in part-time and informal work characterised by low and variable earnings, poor working conditions, and limited advancement opportunities. It is calculable, for challenges are much greater for women. Women are considered economically empowered when they gain greater access to economic resources and opportunities...

Do you want to boost the world’s economy and benefit society? Invest in women, the Win-Win approach.

Women’s Economic Empowerment, what does it mean?

Why it pays to invest in women

The Sustainable Development Goal #5 is to achieve gender equality and empower all women and girls.

The multiplier effect of empowering women

The business for empowering women - McKinsey

Women’s Economic Empowerment

Research found that countries which match the performance of the region that has made the most progress toward gender equality:

$12 trillion a year could be added to GDP in 2025.

The Sustainable Development Goal #5

Infographic Sources

- Women’s rights are human rights. Since the founding of the United Nations in 1945, equality between the genders has been among the most fundamental guarantees of human rights.

- The Sustainable Development Goal #5 is to achieve gender equality and empower all women and girls.

- Improving gender diversity and equality at senior management levels is associated with better business and investment performance.

- 12.5 billion hours of care work are completed for free by women and girls every day, representing at least $10.8 trillion of value to the economy every year.

- Research found that if all countries would match the performance of the country in their region that has made the most progress toward gender equality:

- $1 trillion could be added to GDP by 2030.

- Women are considered economically empowered when they gain greater access to economic resources and opportunities...

- Women participate in paid work globally, compared to 75 percent of men. Women tend to do a double shift at home after work.

- The multiplier effect of empowering women: Every pay check to a woman is an investment in the human capital of the next generation.

- When women earn an income, this has a direct effect on the health, education and well-being of their families and communities.

- The challenges are much greater for women. Women are considered economically empowered when they gain greater access to economic resources and opportunities...

- Globally, women carry out 76% of unpaid care work.

- End all forms of discrimination against all women and girls everywhere.

- Eliminate all forms of violence against all women and girls.

- Eliminate all harmful practices.

- Recognize and value unpaid care and domestic work.

- Ensure women’s full and effective participation and equal opportunities in leadership and decision-making.

- Ensure universal access to sexual and reproductive health and reproductive rights.

- Tackling the global gender gap will boost global GDP.

- Women are considered economically empowered when they gain greater access to economic resources and opportunities...

- Globally, women carry out 76% of unpaid care work.

- 3.2 times more than men.

- Around 50% of women participate in paid work globally.

- Women are over-represented in part-time and informal work characterised by low and variable earnings, poor working conditions, and limited advancement opportunities.

- Women’s rights are human rights.